Unsafe Road Conditions Cause Accidents

Many times, motorists are not aware when dangerous road conditions contributed to their accident. An experienced personal injury lawyer can identify and investigate whether an unsafe road condition contributed to your accident. There are many types of dangerous road conditions that can cause accidents. Some of the most common hazardous road conditions include:

Poor Design

- Street cliffs or other drop-offs
- Defective road design
- Poor street lighting
- Dangerous curves in the layout of the road
- Unsafe entrance ramps or ramps that are too short
- Flooding due to improper drainage

Poor Road Maintenance

- Large potholes
- Missing traffic signs or defective signals
- Road sinkholes
- Inadequate or absent signage
- Missing guardrails
- Road cave-ins

Poor Workmanship

- Failure to follow procedures and rules in the building of roadways
- Using Cheap, low-quality materials for road construction and repair
- Inferior workmanship

When there is an accident due to unsafe or dangerous road conditions, the blame is often placed on drivers, weather conditions, or other factors. Sometimes law enforcement fails to recognize the dangerous state of the road and other times they just ignore it. If an unsafe road condition is to blame for your motor vehicle accident, the government agency responsible can be held liable for your injuries and medical expenses. However, you need an experienced attorney to fight for your rights to secure the compensation you are due.

Proving Negligence in a Dangerous Road Condition Case

Various governmental agencies are responsible for the design and upkeep of roadways. The government does not have to prevent every dangerous road condition. If the issue is trivial or minor, they may not be required to do anything. However, they are responsible for ensuring that motorists have no risk of injury when using a road.

Winning a dangerous road condition case involves proving that the responsible governmental agency was negligent. It takes an experienced attorney to prove that the party responsible knew that the dangerous road condition existed but did not fix the problem. Governments are well financed and prepared to fight dangerous road condition cases. However, a California accident attorney can help uncover things that indicate negligence, such as a history of accidents on a roadway. This can help prove that the government knew that the road was unsafe. Negotiating with government agencies is difficult and we advise you get help to avoid mistakes and delays.
