There has been an upsurge in the use of rechargeable batteries, especially Li-ion batteries. However, despite their efficiency, these batteries can pose an explosion risk to their users. Battery explosions occur when the battery ruptures leading to injuries from the acid contained inside, excessive heat, and battery pieces.

Battery explosion accidents happen in products such as:

- Cell phones
- Vaporizers / E-cigs
- Laptops
- Hoverboards / electric skateboards
- Electric vehicles

Causes of Battery Explode

Samsung recalled approximately 2.5 million Galaxy Note 7 devices after concluding that faulty batteries were the cause of the explosions. Li-ion batteries come fitted with a circuitry meant to allow only the right amount of charge. However, a battery manufacturing defect, shock due to mishandling, and short-circuiting may mean a fault in this critical component of a battery. That results in the chemical reaction often referred to as a 'thermal runaway' that leads to the heat build-up, swelling, and a battery explode in the worst scenario.

Battery Explosion Injuries

Irrespective of the size, battery explosions can cause severe injuries. Cases of the face and corneal injuries have been reported due to watch and car battery explosion. Dry cell explosions scenarios leading to orofacial soft tissue injuries and the fracturing of mandibles have been on the rise. Not to forget that some victims of a battery explosion have sustained severe burn injuries on the face, thighs, upper arms, and trunk.
