Hoverboard Accidents

Since hoverboards became commercially available in 2015, a growing number of injuries related to their use have been reported. Common types of hoverboard-related injuries include: fractured bones, traumatic brain injuries, pulled ligaments and tendons, lacerations, deep bruising, and burns. While many injuries were caused by rider error, there are increasing reports of hoverboard-related injuries that were result of manufacturing defects, including reports of hoverboards catching fire and exploding due to defective ion-lithium batteries. As a result, attorneys are seeing a rise in the number of personal injury lawsuits against hoverboard manufacturers and retailers.

California Hoverboard Accident Laws

Hoverboard accidents are associated with various types of legal issues, including personal injury lawsuits and products liability cases. Most personal injury claims and products liability cases that arise from accidents are based on a principle called negligence. Under this principle, if a person or company's negligent actions causes another person harm, they can be held legally accountable. The injured party, however, is responsible for proving that a defendant was negligent. There are several elements that constitute negligence, including:

- Duty of care, which means the defendant owed a legal duty to the plaintiff to act in a certain manner toward the plaintiff under the circumstances.
- Breach of duty, which means the defendant breached their duty of care by failing to fulfill that duty.
- Causation, which means the breach of duty was the cause of the plaintiff's injury.
- Harm, which means the plaintiff suffered actual damages because of the defendant's negligent act.

Hoverboard Fire Lawsuit

Individuals injured by a hoverboard may have a case for a personal injury lawsuit or product liability lawsuit if it is determined that a defect occurred while manufacturing or designing the hoverboard, or if a manufacturer failed to warn consumers about safety hazards associated with the use of a hoverboard. A hoverboard lawyer can help you determine if you have a case for a lawsuit.

What Type of Compensation is Available?

If you were injured due to another person's negligence, California law allows the injured party to seek compensation. Compensation may include damages for medical bills, pain and suffering, emotional distress, loss of wages and future earnings, and additional punitive damages, which are intended to punish the defendant for negligence. Consult a hoverboard fire lawyer if you have been injured in a hoverboard accident to learn more.
