There are several amusement parks in California that we visit to enjoy with our family and friends. The thrill of the roller coaster ride, the delicious carnival food offerings, and attention-grabbing arcade games make for a fun day of play. We often take our safety for granted and trust that the parks have properly maintained the rides and the operators are trained properly so we do not have to worry about the safety of our families.

Unfortunately, this is not always the case. In fact, there are over 300 amusement park accidents each year in California where visitors are injured due to the negligence of park rides like roller coasters and need the assistance of a personal injury lawyer. If you or a loved one has been injured on a roller coaster in California, contact the injury law experts at Johnson Attorneys Group for a free case review.

Types of Roller Coaster Accident Injuries Handled by Our Team

From broken bones and head injuries to drownings, falls, and even deaths, amusement park accidents have seen an increase each year in California as the rides get bigger, faster, and more dangerous than ever. While most park operators try to maintain a safe environment for guests, amusement park rides like roller coasters, require an extreme amount of maintenance and care to ensure the safety of riders and sometimes fail for a variety of reasons.

Although amusement parks are meant for fun, accidents happen that cause traumatic injury or even death to visitors. California sees many amusement park accidents each year where guests suffer unnecessary injuries due to the negligence of these facilities.

Most Common Causes of Amusement Park Accidents:
