Waterslide Accidents

Unlike other amusement park rides, waterslides are generally unrestrained and water flow can be unpredictable and varied body weights cause each individual to descend the slide differently. Approximately 86% of waterpark accidents reported are caused by waterslides. Accidents can occur because of misuse, design defect or improper maintenance or supervision. Injuries caused by overcrowding, inattentive employees or poorly maintained waterslides are preventable.

According to the CPSC, 13% of waterslide injuries reportedly come from the collision.

There are a number of different elements that may cause injury to waterslide users:

- Collision with other waterslide users – Collision is the most common injury for waterslide users. When someone slows in the slide they can be struck by another user either on the slide or in the plunge pool.
- Lack of flowing water – A person can become stuck inside or stalled on a waterslide due to a lack of flowing water that can cause the user to be struck by another user.
- Being propelled off a slide – The weight, position and speed of someone, along with the amount of water flowing can cause an individual to hydroplane or skim off of a waterslide.
- Collision with fixtures or other objects – Injuries like lacerations, head injuries or death can result from getting on or off the slide or collision with other objects like a waterslide raft, tube or bodyboard.
